

What are the needs of parents of severely injured children in Australia?

Status: Not yet commenced

Synopsis

This study has not yet commenced. It will seek to further identify the needs of parents caring for a child who has suffered a traumatic injury across Australia. The survey for this research program will be informed by the results of previous studies undertaken as a part of The Paediatric Critical Injury Research Program.

Parents/carers of newly injured children, as well as the parents of children injured during the research program, will be invited to participate in a survey. The survey will assess their unmet needs, as well as their emotional wellbeing and levels of psychological distress. Results from study 3 will inform the instrument used for data collection in this study.
